Automatic programming AutoLISP, auto-LISP (AutoLISP was first developed in 1982 by Don Oldenburg at the University of California, Berkeley.) It is a simple meta-language for AutoCAD. It is used for customization and the programming of macros. Visual LISP, visual-LISP (AutoCAD's Visual LISP) is an easy to use language for users to create macros and visual basic for AutoCAD, Windows, and AutoCAD LT. Visual LISP is a Microsoft Windows-based development environment, unlike AutoLISP which is only available for the Mac platform. Automation Script, a scripting language that allows for AutoCAD to be programmed with an Excel/VBA-like language. As of 2014, AutoCAD had about 350 add-ons on the Windows App Store. AutoCAD LT (CATIA LT) and AutoCAD Suite (AutoCAD LT + AcDbSuite) AutoCAD LT is a simplified, less-expensive version of AutoCAD, designed for students, hobbyists, and other non-professionals. It includes some of AutoCAD's features, but lacks many tools. It is priced at around. AutoCAD LT is bundled with AcDbSuite, which includes a set of specialized drawing aids such as drafting blocks, orthographic and perspective rulers, registration pads, slide bars, and electronic pantographs. Microsoft owns the rights to the name AutoCAD for the X and LT versions, but not for the AutoCAD R2009 suite. As of 2017, most CAD vendors in the United States still use the AutoCAD brand for the older packages. AutoCAD LT and AcDbSuite may be bundled with the following software: Microsoft Office Professional (2002, 2003) Microsoft Office Home and Student (2003, 2004) Windows XP Professional (2002, 2003) Windows Vista (2002, 2003) Windows 7 (2008, 2009) Windows 8 (2012, 2013) AutoCAD LT and AcDbSuite may also be bundled with the following hardware: Computer Graphics card Mouse Pointing device (tablet or trackball) Plotter Scanner History In the 1980s, the first major iteration of AutoCAD was released under a commercial license, AutoCAD for Windows. Passive, undisturbed hindlimb motion was recorded in cats by radiography of bones. The motion was calculated from roentgenograms and was described using a six-element rigid body model. Axial rotation of the limb and tibia about the hip axis are the two primary motions. Displacement of these axes is combined with displacement of the tarsus to define motion of the limb. The main motions of the limb are circumduction, adduction, and adduction with internal rotation, and adduction with external rotation. Circumduction is the major motion during loading. Most internal motions are rotation about the hip axis. Several abduction and eversion motions contribute to limb motion during loading and unloading. Joint positions are similar in the hindlimb of the cat and humans. Joints have similar abilities for angular motion and power and moment of
