For a K-algebra C, a B-A-bimodule M, and $b_1, b_2 \in B$, how can one derive an expression for $(b_1b_2)_M - b_1(b_2_M)$? This question was formulated as problem 4.2.14 from the notes from a course on representation theory. I have written down all the definitions and how to solve the problem, but I am not able to get to a solution which takes care of the special details. Thanks in advance for your help! A: It is given that A is a right ideal of B. I will write $$ b\,\cdot\,m=b_1m $$ for "$m\in M$" and "$b\in B$" written on the right. You are given $b,b_1\in B$, $m\in M$. What you want is to get rid of b and m by choosing b_2 and m_1 such that $b_2\cdot m_1=m$. Writing m for m_1, we get $$ b_1m-m_1=b_2(m_1-m). $$ That says that you have to take $$ b_2=b_1-m_1, $$ and m_1 such that $$ b_2\cdot m_1=m-m_1=m-m. $$ The first condition is equivalent to $b_2=b_1+m_2$ for some $m_2\in M$, the second implies $m_1 0cc13bf012

'The ethical' seems to have become the new buzzword in the tech world. This summer, P&G decided not to bring a digital assistant to market because of 'consumer ethical concern.' The Federal Trade Commission has asked for Google's business practices to be reviewed. Researchers have begun to investigate how emotional culture is changing how we make decisions. Some worry that tech companies are manipulating our emotional responses so that we spend money on apps and products we don't need.

Are we working ourselves into a corner? Contra Costa's information technology group is seeing all of these changes play out in its everyday work. Every day is a new challenge to ethical decision making in technology, learning what's ethical and what's not, and being willing to make those decisions. "One of the interesting ethical questions that I'm dealing with is the global distribution of data," said Cathy Tang, director of information technology. "Google and Amazon are good examples of companies that take advantage of data they acquire to give their products and services an advantage, but if they acquire data from a country that doesn't share that data in a way that is beneficial to the consumer, what is the ethical thing to do?" While many countries are now eager to have a piece of the social media action, they are finding that having their citizens on social media sites does more than just allow them to connect with friends and family. Each tweet and post is a piece of data that can be used to track what a citizen is doing and where they are, all the way down to the building they are in, where they work, and what kind of business they are buying. "All data helps with location-based services, but citizens don't care about location-based services as much as companies that acquire the data," said Tang. "For example, a company
