The first trailer introduces the new gameplay from a player perspective and a hint at the development of the game. 22 Player Motion Capture (MP-CH) Exclusive to FIFA 22, Player Motion Capture captures the movements of 22 players during a real-life match and uses the data to power the on-pitch gameplay. By capturing the movement of the real players during a match, players can now be incorporated in the game in more realistic ways. Players will be able to use full-body-weight, one-handed passing, goalkeepers will now be able to use a traditional off-foot kicking motion, and more. The new technology brings the FIFA player experience one step closer to real-life football. Real-Player Control and Control Depth Players will now be able to control the ball with the motion-capture data from their own body. Selecting a player on the touchline will now allow you to control that player's passing motions and dribbling, including one- and two-handed passes. Players will also control pass types and recipient players that are closer to real-life situations, such as just controlling short and long passes without looking down at your controller. Additionally, players will be able to vary the timing of their first-touch passes to add more subtlety to their control. Movements will be able to also be controlled by pressing the directional buttons. In-Game Foot Controls To improve gameplay, gamers can also now control the ball by pressing the buttons on the foot they use to kick the ball. In-game challenges are now able to be navigated using head and motion controls as well. The new Player Motion Capture technology brings more realism to the ball-control gameplay and will be exclusive to FIFA 22, a full game launch-exclusive title. More information can be found here.
