Field of the Invention This invention relates to vibratory separators used in the separation of solids from a liquid media, and more particularly, to the manipulation and control of the vibratory motion of the vibratory separator. 2. Description of the Related Art A vibratory separator uses vibratory motion to separate solids from a liquid. In a vibratory separator the vibratory motion is created by a vibrating plate wherein the plate can be round, oval, elliptical, rectangular or other non-rectangular shapes. The vibrating plate is attached to a support structure and the support structure is vibrated by a source of vibrating energy. The liquid media, typically a slurry of solids and water, is introduced into the vibratory separator and the vibrating motion of the vibrating plate causes the solids to accumulate or become encapsulated within the liquid media, often creating a mass of solids encapsulated within the liquid media. Vibratory separators are used in a variety of industries, including the food industry and the pulp and paper industry
