This is a strategy RPG where you play as a human named Tarnished who once loved being part of the Gloomwood village, but after being chosen by one of the villagers to cast the curse at the beginning of the game, Tarnished has been living on the fringe of the Lands Between, as he must constantly fend off the attacks of monsters from the land beyond. However, due to a mistake, he becomes trapped inside the Land Beyond, fighting to escape. At the beginning of the game, Tarnished will be able to use the equipment that was formerly obtained by his fallen companions, and will be able to learn blacksmith skills and access a variety of items as he progresses through the story. Tarnished joins an adventure with a few of his companions, and gradually, he will overcome challenges and acquire new equipment. As you progress in the story, you can also engage in a variety of quests and participate in other events. In general, The Lands Between features a real-time strategy RPG battle system in the 3D world, but there is also a dungeon exploration part in which you navigate to predetermined areas and battle enemies on the way. I was hanging in Vienna, looking at a small square that's on my way to work, wondering whether I should take the bus or the tram when someone suddenly shouted, "Wattpad!" The next thing I knew, I had a new home for my stories. I had a good amount of time before I had to be at work, so I did what any good Wattpad user would do: I wrote a story. I'd been using Wattpad for a few months now and I'd been wanting to write a story for a while. I'd lost my voice a while ago, and I thought it was about time that I get it back. I chose to write a character arc and a plot to match it. I sat down to write and, even though I'd been writing for years, I had no idea where to begin. In the end, I gave up and looked around at the people around me to see what my characters would do in the situation. What my good friends would say, what people in their situation would say. Then, I wrote down everything I thought they'd say, added in some inanity, and wrote myself a story. In the end, the story was 5,000 words long. It's still not finished. There's more to write. There'll be multiple plot lines, multiple characters, multiple endings. It's a huge story, and this isn't the end of it. I know that there's a certain degree of 'Fake It 'til You Make it' going on in writing these days. In my first playwriting classes, a story would be structured so that you could cut and rearrange the script to suit the needs of the production, and have the script be rewritten with different names and different times. In this, Wattpad is similar. A story can be cut to suit the needs of an episode. Every line, every word is there to enhance the overall structure of the work. The only problem is that, while I've been changing my story ever since I started, I've been doing so gradually, changing the plot line and characters a bit at a time. This changes the pacing of the story and, in essence, makes it almost impossible to find when the story is done. So, what's stopping me from finishing my story? To be quite honest, I feel that I've already done everything I want to do in the
