I bought the ubuntu 13.04 and 12.04 and wanted to install a few things but found that the software center has very limited options. When I downloaded the stuff, it was a single file which had it all. The software center can now see the deb files, but the fact that it's a single file makes installation very easy. When I double click it, it opens up a software center but only 3 of the 6 programs (viber, acdsee, solitaire) are available. So how can I get the other three programs? I don't want to use Wine or play around with the terminal a lot. The reason I want this is because I use my macbook often but they don't have the software center or viber so I download the deb file. A: Open the Terminal and run sudo apt-get install package-name sudo apt-get install package-name will search and install the software you specify. The package-name can be found on packages.ubuntu.com as well as in the Software Sources in Settings - this will find any software that is available. If you need to install more than one package, use the -y switch to make the installation silent: b7e8fdf5c8
