From the section Football Sightings of an eerie green glow appearing on the pitch at West Ham's new home, the London Stadium, has been blamed on a malfunctioning thermometer. The Hammers' new home, which opened last month, has attracted attention during the World Cup, when it was revealed that parts of the arena were being lit from within the pitch - nicknamed "pitchglow" by fans. The English FA have said that the glow is from a temperaturemeasuring device with an on-off switch that was not working correctly. It is not believed that any players have suffered any ill-effects from the lights, and a report from the FA said they had been "fully tested and tested successfully". In a statement, an FA spokesperson said: "Fans were alarmed when images
