Vala Sieve Not a very good sieve and a bit buggy, but quite effective. Since it is a command line sieve and crashes once it reaches the last thousands of numbers, it is almost useless for quick sieves. It can be used to calculate the first, last or nth prime numbers (numbers where the consecutive square numbers dont contain a square number), but the list of prime numbers it gives are not very accurate. 942. Find All Primes Output all primes up to a specified number. I really, really don't know how it works, but it does... It uses a lot of memory and should be tested to make sure you have enough. 943. A Slow Sieve Sieve of Eratosthenes - looks like it uses a complex version of the basic sieve. It is supposed to be slower than the straightforward one. 944. Sieve of Eratosthenes Heavily commented and updated version of the classic sieve. Works for arbitrary powers of 2 but is slow for general numbers. 945. Rabin Sieve

In it, i-dontbuythis.com says: I am in a pickle. I have nearly a million in my credit union and I am close to having to close my bank account. I have had this money for about five years. I have not done anything with it other than deposit it into my credit union. I have been working on a degree in graphic design and this money is mine. Is this considered a money making scheme? I don't know what to do. It is only risk if you do not use it. What you are talking about is not any different then lending money to a friend, if you want to call it that.Q: MySQL: Matching rows based on values in a column I have a table that looks like this +-----+-----+-----+-----+ | ID | StartID | EndID | Value | +-----+-----+-----+-----+ And I need to know how to select all IDs for which the value starts at a particular value, and ends at a particular value. In this case, I need to know all IDs for which the value is between 10 and 20. I can't seem to figure out how to write a query that does that, though, and all the ones I have tried simply return all the rows.
