With the collaboration of merchants and the creation of centralized corporate logistic centers, the flow of goods becomes increasingly streamlined. Although this is a significant advantage for consumers, it also poses a challenge to those responsible for supply chain optimization and risk management. Since January 2013, there are 150.000 goods from 11.000 suppliers delivered to the customers of the new Austrian retail chain AMX. What has changed since then? Let’s see! The new payment solution from POS Connects enables retailers to offer their customers an open, interoperable and traceable cashless payment solution. Customers can be happy with this service as it is simple and quick. Also, it is very convenient to use it as all the information can be stored and communicated via a secured server or directly within the POS Connects terminal itself. The need of retailers to communicate with their customers and deliver information about their brands has grown over the years. Nowadays, more than ever before, the first impression is an important point of reference and therefore the traditional store, with its high volume of stock, can no longer satisfy the needs of the modern consumer. The new store concept has become a must-have! We’ve partnered with a worldwide Fortune 500 company which provides the majority of its services from Austria and thus builds great ties to Austria as well. Austria is one of our prime customers and our distribution centers in Austria are very often involved in complex deals that require complex technology solutions. Yes, it’s true, we’re a big internet service provider in Austria and we also provide internet access to the customers of our retail partners. Our service is an integral part of the company and there’s no need

The way to approach a given problem varies widely from one person to the next. At some point in your life, you’ve encountered a spreadsheet that made your problem seem more manageable. Whether your problem is about taxes, project management, or getting fit, there is one common component to those spreadsheets: making your problem seem more manageable. Here is how to think about any problem: If it seems overwhelming or you can’t find the answer anywhere, it’s probably because you’re approaching it from the wrong angle. Your problem is most likely: Adding features to your product. Fixing a bug in your product. Reporting sales. Trying to learn something. You’re not a mathematician, and it’s impossible to solve problems. At a certain point in any project, there is a fundamental difference between a problem that is unsolvable and a problem that is simply unsolved. The difference is that when you solve a problem, you have one very specific product to show for it. Solutions are often beautiful. They feel more complete. More than that, they are inherently correct. When you don’t solve a problem, the problem continues to live on, in all the projects that you take on. This means that you are the one who has to define what is the acceptable level of complexity in your product. Your problem is unsolvable because you are trying to solve it with a calculator. That’s not to say that spreadsheets are inherently wrong. But if you’re used to spreadsheets, it will be harder to think about the problem as a mathematical problem. Your comfort zone is not the solution. Your problem is most likely a matter of: Adding features to your product. Fixing a bug
