I have an application that uses Excel files to store data. Sometimes the data is in weird formats (e.g. number arrays, or composite arrays) so I'd like to also store these in the Excel format that they come from. The application itself can use Oracle Forms, but is (was) only designed to read/write/view one file at a time. To get the form to work, I need to load the data from the Excel file as an XML DOM object. After that, reading/writing data to/from the DOM is easy, but I can't figure out a way to give the form a FormHandle when the user does not exist the data in a form, or the type of data. Are there any events or form properties that will let me know what type of data is being loaded in the form? Or at least a way to determine when
