Once the Creative Cloud trial is over, one must act decisively to get a meaningful return and support for the program. Photoshop has often delivered features before other software. It's my understanding that Lightroom is now overlapping in some areas with Photoshop Professional. I'd like to see Adobe Photoshop make use of AI and machine learning algorithms to assist in delivering updates. Timeline is Adobe's boneheaded decision of the decade. A feature that should have been in the first version and then added to Lightroom was ignored while Photoshop and Lightroom were developed separately. The best program in town is practically a cul-de-sac and it's hard to get that attitude out of people's heads because at one point or another, everyone has been there. When Lightroom was a dependent program, that problem was compounded immensely. I discovered that I'm not the only one to have had problems loading an absolute path or file path into Lightroom 5 (sorry, no idea why I keep getting this, I haven't changed a setting in Lightroom in a while). When I tried to load the path for my image "iMac back cover.jpg" file into Lightroom, I got an error message "Cannot open or read image 'iMac back cover.jpg'". When I removed the file extension from the filename, I then got an even weirder error message "Cannot load image file: 'iMac back cover: iMac back cover.jpg'". I fixed it by restarting the application. I'll make an entry in the bug tracker if I discover more. Thank you for the detailed review. I have seen the same issue. Using a professional brand name, brand specific filter I just imported. Lightroom automatically renamed the file and I was looking at a "random" jpg. When I rename the file it resumes to being branded.
