I've decided to use Photoshop for the most part when making my own graphics, I've laid the foundation of design in InDesign. I create the layout in a program called InDesign. I build in between the header and the footer. I make sure that the designs are set up in a square grid format. This helps to keep them more modular and easy to move around. Once it's all laid out, I can import the graphics into Photoshop. I start with the custom canvas and make each layer individual. I have the background, my logo, the header, the body copy and the footer. I change the layer as needed. If I need to create a new element I simply drop it on the layer below. If I need to modify it, then I tweak it in Photoshop. I can also make a new canvas and make new layers on that particular canvas. e3d0a04c9c
